Evil Home Influences May Ruin Children

Experts in child behavior are beginning to concern themselves because of the fact that modern conditions of civilization have produced a child who is exceedingly difficult to handle from the point of view of his social conduct. However, even since the time of Cain and Abel, children have had trouble getting along with one another and there seems no reason to believe that modern conditions, motor cars and other innovations in our environment are primarily responsible for development of what are called unstable or difficult children.

It seems possible that the shattered nerves of parents, who have found difficulties in getting through the past few years and depression times, may be reflected to a considerable extent in the children.

Authorities recognize the broken home as one of the most potent factors in causing juvenile delinquency. Of 250 consecutive cases of child delinquency that appeared in a children's court in England, 101 were found to come from homes in which the parents were unable to get along together.

In every one of these cases, there were stories of family quarrels, bickering, overstrained nerves of mothers, and ill-tempered fathers. The death or desertion of a parent, cruel treatment, destitution, and long illness are frequent factors in causing a child to get off the correct path of living.

As an indication of the fact that the delinquency did not represent any distortion of the child's intelligence or character, the vast majority of these children, when placed in institutions where they had helpful surroundings and proper living conditions, developed quite properly so far as concerns their mental and physical growth.

However, in some cases the damage done in childhood in a very bad environment may be so great that even years of institutional care will not bring about a satisfactory result.

No institution, however perfectly run, can supply the intimate and loving contact and the maternal caresses which every child craves.

The difficult child is one whose behavior tends to make him a nuisance to his elders. He is timid or sensitive and lacks sociability.

He suffers usually with nail biting, thumb sucking, stammering and habit spasms. He finds difficulty in getting along in school and he is also likely to wander away, lie, steal or betray extraordinarily cruelly. None of these performances is normal to a child under proper conditions.

A study of the situation at home, and of the physical condition of the child as well, will reveal in most cases factors which are correctable and which when controlled will bring about a change in the entire nature of the child concerned.

Here's an Appealing Tale of a Small Boy—Tarkington's "Little Orvie" Is An Enjoyable Book

In "Little Orvie," Booth Tarkington returns to what is, perhaps, his richest vein, and does another of his enchanting, humorous and wistful stories of a small boy.

Little Orvie is a lad of some six or seven years. He is a resident of that broad land which Mr. Tarkington has mapped for us more beguilingly than any other; that mid-west small city region whose landscape bears a benign Hoosier aspect, where economic problems come not, and the usual perversities of human nature are toned down and made endurable; where people live in houses with huge lawns and raise large, mildly discordant but somehow contentedly happy families.

To his parents, Little Orvie is a young hellion. He is the kind of lad who falls off the balcony into the punch bowl when grandpa and grandma celebrate their golden wedding.

Little Interest in Long Debt Relief

Louisiana Slow in Making Application Under New Law

BATON ROUGE, La.—(AP)—Senator Huey P. Long's debt moratorium in Louisiana is functioning in pretty prosaic fashion.

A few weeks back when Long startled America by proclaiming that he was going to have the Louisiana legislature approve a two-year moratorium on all debt, nobody—except possibly the senator himself, and even that isn't certain—knew how it was going to work out.

That is how it is working out after 19 days of operation.

A thin stream of debtors trickles into the debt moratorium headquarters in the statehouse from day to day, seeking "relief."

Similar streams find their way into district moratorium offices in New Orleans, Monroe, Shreveport, and Alexandria.

Those that can't present their appeals write letters. It's all the same. Debtors calling at the state headquarters in the capitol, lay their trouble before state Senator Coleman E. Lindsey of Minden, La., chief deputy debt moratorium commissioner. Those applicants at the district offices talk it over with the district commissioners.

It's all very routine. There are no long lines of clamoring debtors, and there has been no rush for "relief" of the proportions some expected when Senator Long rammed the moratorium concurrent resolution and act through the November special session of the legislature.

French Crippled Veterans in Riot

Protest Because They Don't Get as Much as Americans, English

PARIS, France.—(AP)—France's crippled war veterans clashed with police on the streets of Paris again Sunday and three were injured in a scuffle during which blows were rained on the heads of officers with crutches and canes.

Each week the crippled veterans, some armless, many limping, some without eyes, have been gathering in the Place de l'Opera to protest pension cuts. Sunday they carried signs saying they get from their government only a half to a third what the crippled veterans of America, Germany and England are receiving.

When the demonstrators tried to march to the Place de la Concorde a solid line of police and Mobile Guards loop up positions and blocked their passage. The veterans were prevented from marching across the streets and blocking traffic, as they have done on previous occasions.

The veterans, shouting menacingly, shuffled, limped and ran in attack formation against the police, who were forced to use clubs. In the scuffle that ensued three policemen were injured.

Japanese Ship in Distress at Sea

Victoria Maru Holding Her Own as Rescue Ships Arrive

NEW YORK.—(AP)—Two ships stood by the disabled Japanese freighter Victoria Maru 500 miles north of the Azores Monday, ready to take off her crew.

The Victoria wallowed helplessly. The captain and two mates had been killed by waves which swept her bridge and damaged the rudder. Indications were that the two rescue ships were waiting for the time to abate somewhat before taking off the crew of the freighter.

Ship Sends Out SOS

NEW YORK.—(AP)—With three of its officers reported dead, the storm-tossed Japanese freighter Victoria Maru apparently was holding its own on the mid-Atlantic Sunday night as other craft steamed to her aid.

"Present conditions not so much dangerous," said an SOS received at 9:22 p. m. by the S. S. Washington and relayed to the Mackay Radio Corporation's station at Rockland, Me.

Other wireless messages received by Mackay said the steam trawler Amsterdam, one of several ships in the vicinity of the crippled freighter, was going to its assistance 100 miles away at a speed of 10 knots.

You'll find many new odors that are sure to become popular, too.

You can get diminutive flacons of all the expensive brands, and it's a far better idea than giving a huge amount of an inferior kind. If you're getting an unknown-to-you variety, try it before you buy. The perfume counter generally is near the front door of a store and it's a good idea to stop there first.

Ask the salesgirl to spray a little of the scent you have in mind on your wrists and neck, finish your shopping and then come back to the perfume display. By that time, you should be able to tell whether or not you like the new perfume well enough to give it to someone for Christmas.

You can give your best friend a scent called "Glamor," made by one of the most famous perfumers of our times and put up in a grand, squatly jug. Needless to say, its very name should subtly flatter the recipient.

There's a gardenia perfume named Ermine which lives up to its luxurious-sounding name. It's made by a good firm, too, smells spicy rather than sickly sweet like fresh gardenias often do, and lingers, rather hauntingly, for hours and hours.

PETER said, knocking ashes into a cigaret tray, "I don't want you to bother with entertaining me. You're to do exactly as you please, you know."

"Yes, I know."

BEGIN HERE TODAY

ANN HOLISTER, pretty and 20, and work in a library. She fell in love with PETER MILLICENT, though warned against him by her room-mate, SARAH KENT.

Later Ann meets PETER KENDALL, wealthy and handsome and engaged to VALERIA BENNETT, society girl. Without Peter's knowledge, Valeria goes about with a gay set. One night she attends a party at which a man is shot. Peter, learning how Valeria has deceived him, tells her their engagement is at an end.

The same day Ann breaks her engagement to Peter. She and Peter meet in a restaurant and discuss their mutual unhappiness. When he asks her to marry him she agrees. They are married that night and set out for Florida.

In the days that follow Peter is disturbed by the realization that he is deeply attracted by his pretty friend's wife. A telegram arrives, calling him home.

NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY

CHAPTER XVII

ANN knew Peter was angry by the look on his face when they arrived at their apartment and found only Paul Johnson there. Every member of the Kendall family was conspicuous by absence.

"Hello, and congratulations to both of you," Paul said. "You're right on schedule."

Peter introduced him to Ann. Paul's eyes rested approvingly on her.

"Got your letter a week ago, Peter. Marcia and I got out that day and found this place. Hope it suits."

"Thanks, Paul. It was awfully good of you and Marcia. And nice of you to be here. The place is fine."

"Marcia and I will be over soon. I'll be getting along now."

Ann suspected that Paul Johnson was relieved to get away, that he was a little embarrassed by the situation.

The apartment he and his wife had selected was in an exclusive neighborhood, Ann and Peter went from room to room.

"Like it?" Peter queried.

"It's so big," Ann said faintly. "So luxurious. I'll never get used to it."

"All right every other way?" Peter's eyes, a little anxious, were on her face.

"Perfect. It's only that I'll be lost in all this magnificence. Honestly, Peter, it's like a house. I didn't know they made apartments this big."

There was a large, beautifully furnished living room and sun parlor, a dining room, two guest rooms. On the other side, Peter and Ann's suite. Her room at the front and his at the back with a small cozy sitting room, done in bright chintz, in between.

"Well," Ann said, when she reached this room. Peter smiled.

"Are you tired? Why don't you turn in?"

"After a while. I want to get acquainted with this place before I go to bed."

PETER said, knocking ashes into a cigaret tray, "I don't want you to bother with entertaining me. You're to do exactly as you please, you know."

"Yes, I know."

She went into the kitchen and stood for a moment staring absently about, scarcely seeing the perfect equipment.

"What had Peter meant? Was he being thoughtful, reminding her that she was to be free of wifely compulsions in her plans? Or did it mean that Peter was serving notice, now that they were back, that he intended to follow his own life?"

She heard the phone ring. Someone was calling who evidently knew of their arrival. She could hear Peter's deep voice answering. Millicent was saying, "Hello, Peter. I've been out of town. Only just heard this minute that you were back."

"Telling the truth?"

"Have I ever used alibis?"

"Sorry, Mil."

"Mother is giving a dinner party for Carol tonight. Of course it was a deliberate slap at Ann. You needn't expect too much of Mother. If you could have seen how feather-flew around the old coop! Cheerful news?"

Peter scowled blackly into the phone. "Well, at least I'm not surprised. You can tell her for me that she can count me out, too."

"I'll describe your tone of voice which would be better. What's she like—your new wife?"

"Come over and find out."

"I think I will run over—now."

Peter hung up the phone, feeling better. Millicent's friendship or enmity were not to be taken lightly. She could prove a good friend and a bad enemy.

Ann came into the room. She looked tired and sober, he thought. "That was Millicent," Peter said. "She's been out of town on a week-end party. She's coming over now."

"Oh," Ann said. Peter saw her face brighten. Then she had been hurt. Poor kid.

Ann was thinking that it was silly to be feeling glad it was Millicent and not Valeria who had been calling Peter.

"SAW in the paper the Peter Kendalls have returned," Mac broke the news to Sarah, who would be "Mrs. Mac" before many moons.

"Imagine telling me!"

"You've talked to her?"

"Yes, she's coming over tomorrow. She is shopping with Millicent. I hear she's going to have some photographs taken. One of the newspapers wants them. Ann didn't know if Peter would like the idea but he did."

"Good sport," Mac said. "I like that. Telling the gossips to go to hell."

"Can't you hear the 'ohs' and 'ahs'?" So this is the girl Peter Kendall married to spite Valeria Bennett."

Mac laughed. Sarah's mimicry was perfect. "Well, I hope the picture will do our girl justice. At least they won't be able to find any fault with her looks."

ANN felt that she was living in a strange and colorful dream. She felt dizzy, confused. Exquisite dresses, gorgeous evening wraps, hats at prices that took her breath away, beautiful accessories. Rich furs, floating draperies, velvet that fell about a slim model's figure in seductive lines.

Millicent's voice was saying, "The necklace of that green Vlounted dress is new. Ann, you'd be perfectly entranced in that. We won't put that frack up. You'll be almost as sweet in it as in the white crepe."

Sales people were saying flattering things. Millicent's manner was brisk and business-like. "Ann, I don't think you should decide on that wrap without looking some place else. It's stunning, but you might see something you like even better."

The next moment she said admiringly, "You look positively sweet. I wish Peter could see you in that."

When they were alone for a moment, Ann said in a low tone, "I am sure I won't need so many things."

"My dear, you're only started. You'll need wools more. For teas, luncheons, dinners, dances."

Ann felt faint. Millicent spent $100 more casually than she had ever spent $5 in her life.

"Charge this to Mrs. Peter Kendall," Over and over Ann heard that. She had noticed the immediate reaction in the saleswoman's manner. Catering to her as though she was a princess.

Two hours were spent in fittings. It had been an ordeal for Ann. She caught a glimpse of herself in a long mirror. The heavy winter coat—two winters old—that she had worn to Florida looked out of place and very forlorn after the richness and smartness of the clothes she had been trying on.

Tomorrow there would be an exquisite sable wrap, purchased, inconspicuously, at the same time she had bought a spring model trimmed in silver fox.

"You'll need that heavy coat, for winter will be with us some weeks longer," Millicent said. "But on mild days you'll want to step out in something spring-like. Oh, here are mother and Carol!"

Mrs. Kendall and Carol had entered the shop as Ann and Millicent were leaving. Millicent introduced Ann.

The cold glance of her mother-in-law rested on her. "How are you?" Mrs. Kendall barely nodded.

Carol said, "Glad to know you, Ann." But there was no warmth in her tone.

Ann felt Mrs. Kendall's eyes on her. Millicent said lightly, as the silence continued, "Ann has bought all of the prettiest things at Jerome's, so there is no use in going there in shop, Mother."

"How nice for her," Mrs. Kendall's voice sent the thrust home. Ann followed Millicent to the car in silence. After a moment, Millicent burst out, "You must think the Kendalls are a dreadful lot. And they are when they want to be. All except Peter. But Mother's bark is much worse than her bite."

A week later Millicent drove away from Ann's apartment with a grim look on her face. She had found Ann standing near the window when she had run in, unannounced. Ann had turned, surprised. So surprised that she had no time to cover the wistfulness on her face.

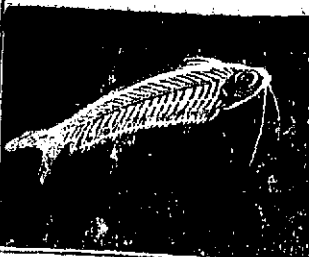

Millicent had decided, "She's not happy." Well, something must be done about that. And since men were such idiots, never seeing below the surface of a woman's smile, it was up to Millicent to carry Ann's case to court—and argue it.

Paraguay Defeats Bolivia Decisively

Now in Position to Dictate Peace Terms for Chaco Territory

ASUNCION, Paraguay.—(AP)—A smashing Paraguayan victory in the northern sector of the Chaco Boreal Saturday resulted in the cutting to pieces of seven Bolivian regiments and the recapture of three forts, it was announced here.

The victory came as Paraguay's southern army pushed its advance deeper into Bolivian territory as the result of the capture of Fort Sama-lucate Friday.

Fall of that fort left Gen. Jose Estigarribia, Paraguayan commander-in-chief only 50 miles short of the main Bolivian army base at Villamontes whose fall, it was believed, might prove to be the finishing blow in the long Chaco war.

The rapid Paraguayan advance on the northern front, reports reaching Asuncion Saturday night spid, resulted in the capture of numerous prisoners, virtual destruction of seven Bolivian regiments, and capture of Forts Piculoma, Loma Vistosa and Irindague.

All three of the positions, captured by Paraguay early in the year during her big drive in the north, had been retaken recently in the Bolivian push that took 1,800 square miles of territory from the Paraguayans.

Strength of the Bolivian army has been shattered by the offensives in the north and in the south, Paraguayan military leaders asserted Saturday.

An hour with a book would have brought to his mind the secret it took him a whole year to find. The facts that he learned at enormous expense. Were all on the library shelves to commence. Alas for our hero, too busy to read he was also too busy, it proved, to succeed. We may win without credit or backing or style. We may win without energy, skill or a smile. Without patience or aptitude, purpose or wit. We may even succeed if we're lacking in wit. But take it from me as a very safe hint—A civilized man cannot live without print.—Selected.

Quietly without any trumpets and no attention-impelling stunts, the Hope Library serves the public here in a most efficient manner. One of the most important aspects of the library service is that of the wide range of books on the library shelves to do their supplementary reading in connection with their school work. During the period of extensive unemployment the library has been especially valuable to Hope as a community asset. More people have had more time to read than ever before. This enforced leisure time has increased to a great extent the activities at the library. Idle people have not been slow to realize the advantage of devoting a considerable portion of their time to mental improvement. The Hope library is not maintained by a public tax, nor is it included in a community chest and naturally the question will arise, "How do they keep going?" The work at the library with the exception of a small amount of CWA work, during the past year at which time the worn books were repaired has been kept going by volunteer service and management. We say management, because the library has been able at all times out of the membership dues, to buy and place on the shelves, the very latest and most popular fiction, biography, and adding from time to time splendid books of reference, and we are asking the people who believe in community service and character building among youths, such as that now being done by the library at this season of the year when our hearts and minds turn to giving, remember the library and send a membership to some shut-in or friend who loves to read and realize that you have given a Christmas present that will bring in dividends during the entire year. You will find on the shelves at this time, such books as "So Red the Rose" voted the most popular fiction of the year. "The Lamb in His Bosom," by Caroline Miller. "Anthony Adverse" is still going strong, in fact, you cannot hold literary conversations at this time, that "Anthony Adverse" is not mentioned. Another book, that afforded the writer splendid entertainment is "When the Stars Fell on Alabama," by Carl Cramer. A year's membership in the library is one dollar.

"Whether this should be called an institute of criminology or a federal school for training in law administration; whether it should include at its inception a degree-granting academy for those who may be selected and training for professional careers; whether it should begin with the co-ordination of already existing units of instruction and research and develop gradually—these are less important questions than that we should declare ourselves clearly upon the underlying proposition, that there is need for training and research of this type and that it can be done."

Sentimentality Lashed
Henry L. Stimson, former secretary of state, asserted "we have become sentimental over crime to a hysterical degree which is largely responsible for the break down of our system of justice."

Stimson, who first became a public prosecutor 28 years ago, said: "Such an attitude strikes at the root of punishment and removes to a very large degree a determined inducement against crime. It tends to exalt the criminal and make him pose as a hero instead of the abnormal creature that he is. It enters into and mars and delays every step of the official procedure."

Stimson also attacked existing legal machinery, declaring: "The percentage of our criminals who are never caught delays in getting to trial those who are apprehended, the technical obstacles which are allowed to intervene in the course of the trial, the unsubstantial reasons which have permitted to set aside verdicts in appellate courts and the ease with which a convicted criminal can be released on bail pending an appeal have all combined to produce a tardy and uncertain justice in this country."

City Property Tax Rate Still Higher

Up 17 Cents Over Last Year on Average for 217 Cities

NEW YORK.—(AP)—Property tax rates were 17 cents higher this year than last in 217 cities in the United States with a population of more than 20,000.

The increase was measured in an average adjusted form on a $1,000 valuation by C. E. Rightor, director of the Atlantic City Survey Commission, and the conclusions will be published this week in the National Municipal Review.

On the outlook, Rightor says, "while there are many changes evolving in our tax laws, property will continue to bear the brunt of the cost of local government."

The range in total tax rates is $85.90 per $1,000 valuation in Cicero, Ill., to $15 for Washington.

In the 217 cities reporting both years, an increase of 26 cents is shown in the average total tax rate from $34.30 to $34.56. There are 105 cities with a higher rate, 81 a lower, and 31 no change.

Total property values in those cities were reduced for taxation purposes by 6.4 per cent from 1933 to this year and now stand at $63,011,000,000.

A downward trend in valuations and rates from 1930 to 1934 was indicated, a tendency which Rightor said "gives rise to the thought that property taxes are reaching a level that will assure local government of a more certain yield, with less delinquency occurring."

FLAPPER FANNY SAYS

Chime in on Christmas spirit by ringing the bell with food for some poor family.

lion dollar increase in cash farm income foreseen by the Bureau of Agricultural Economics for 1934.

This is sweet music to the ears of farmers who have these commodities to sell but there is a discordant note for many whose production has been slashed, in some cases almost to nothing, by drought and insect plagues.

Chicago futures market quotations Saturday showed wheat was 127 per cent higher than on a corresponding date in 1932 and 19 per cent higher than the same date last year. Corn, with livestock feeders bidding frantically for the now almost precious cereal, was 309 per cent higher than two years ago and 82 per cent above a year ago.

Hog prices, would should increase correspondingly with corn, were 83 per cent higher than in 1932 and 76 per cent above 1933 price, not figuring the processing tax, which is an indirect benefit to producers. Cotton farmers, on the basis of Chicago futures prices for October deliveries, could command a price 98 per cent above that of two years ago and 17 per cent above quotations a year ago.

The bureau of Agricultural Economics has estimated cash farm income this year will total $6,000,000,000 compared with $4,333,000,000 in 1932. About $700,000,000 of this year's income will be in the form of AAA benefit payments. Nat C. Murray, a Chicago crop expert, estimated that despite the havoc of crop losses the cash value of the reduced yields of wheat, corn and oats now is approximately $240,000,000 more than last year.

Crooked Lawyers Next U. S. Target

Disbarment Proceedings Urged by Attorney General Cummings

WASHINGTON.—(AP)—Elimination of crooked lawyers as part of the government's "rub-out-crime" program Sunday night was on the program for the National Crime Conference opening Monday.

This suggestion was added as master criminologists of the country traveled to the capital to attend a meeting called by Attorney General Cummings at which President Roosevelt was scheduled to keynote the meeting with an address Monday night.

Mr. Cummings was represented as believing that wider use of prosecution, disbarment proceedings and general condemnation of lawyers illegally active in criminal law practice should be made.

One of the proposals received by the Justice Department calls for the abolition of private lawyers in criminal cases, suggesting that a system of compulsory state defense be substituted.

Mayer C. Goldman, New York lawyer, in a letter to Mr. Cummings, said such a system would eliminate crooked attorneys "whose aid and assistance to killers, kidnapers and organized gangsters constitute a calamity and a perversion of justice."

"It will also rob organized crime of its most powerful alliance and do more than any other single thing to handicap racketeers," Goldman wrote.

Tablets of sunshine for growing children

SLEET and snow keep children inside on many winter days. What sunshine they get is weak in the rays that produce vitamin D. No wonder youngsters lose their pep, become victims of winter ill.

It is tremendously important that your children get their share of vitamin D in winter. It prevents rickets, and builds strong bones and teeth. They also need vitamin A to resist infection.

For children especially, we suggest MCKESSON'S VITAMIN CONCENTRATE TABLETS OF COD LIVER OIL. Children love their tempting taste. Each delicious chocolate-coated tablet brings all the vitamins in one teaspoonful of U. S. P. X. (revised 1934) Cod Liver Oil. And in addition it supplies calcium and phosphorus. Give them to your children regularly—and note the results: fewer "colds" and greater resistance to other respiratory diseases, juster appetites, more pep.

MCKESSON'S VITAMIN CONCENTRATE TABLETS OF COD LIVER OIL are just as good for grown-ups. They help protect you against illness and add to your vitality.
Protect health the vitamin way. Take these tablets regularly. Give them to your children to help them grow sound bones and teeth. Buy them at any good drug store. A dollar bottle brings you 100 MCKESSON'S VITAMIN CONCENTRATE TABLETS.
